POETRY PASSAGE

Life has loveliness to sell,
All beautiful and splendid things
Blue waves whitened as a cliff
So aring five that says and sings
And children's faces looking up,
Holding wonder like a cup.

Now you see that there is here a daily conflict between what you and we understand today as civilization and the state which I am picturing to you as a state of bliss and a desirable state. On the other hand, the basis of culture or civilization is understood to be the multiplication of all your wants. If you have one room, you will desire to have two rooms, three rooms, the more the merrier. And Similarly, you will want to have as much furniture as you can put in your house, and so on endlessly. And the more you possess, the better culture you represent or some such thing.

At the end of every concert, she was mobbed by autograph hunters. They would hem in and not allow her to leave the dais.

At the moment Mohan, slowly progressing towards the exit, would turn around and call her across the hall, ‘Selvi, hurry up. You want to miss the train?’

Still a lot of time; she could have said, but she was not in the habit of contradicting him: for Mohan this was a golden chance not to be missed. He would then turn to a group of admirers, waiting to escort him and Selvi, particularly Selvi, to the car, and remark in apparent jest, ‘Left to herself, she’ll sit there and fill all the autograph books in the world till doomsday.

She has no sense of time”.

The sergeant : Halt! Where are you from, riff-raff?

EILIF : Second Finnish Regiment,

The sergeant : Where are your papers?

Mother courage : Papers

Swiss CHEESE : But this is Mother courage!

The sergeant : Never heard of her. Where’d she get a name like that.

Mother Courage : They call me mother courage, because I was afraid, I would be ruined. So I drove through the bom bardment of Riga like a mad woman, with fifty leaves of bread in my cart. They were going mouldy, I couldn’t please myself.

The Sergeant : No funny business! Where are your papers?

Mother courage : Here, sergeant! Here’s a Bible. I got it in Altotting to wrap my cucumbers in. Here’s a map of Moravia God knows if I’ll ever get there – the birds can have it if I don’t. And here’s a document saying my horse hasn’t got foot and mouth disease – Pity he died on us, he cost fifteen guilders, thank God, I didn’t pay it. Is that enough papers?

13. A good book, as with any good story, exposes children to worlds beyond their own. It possesses the power to excite their imagination and draw them into these worlds, allowing them to experience vicariously what they may never go through in their real lives. The lives of the major characters are laid bare before the reader, and one travels along with them thorough thick and thin as the plot unfolds, participating in the story. This causes one to grow along with the characters.

This gives insight is to oneself as well as others. One learns about people’s behaviour in different situations, and forms opinions about how to behave in a given situation. The behaviour patterns that one observes in characters are internalized, leading to role-play and the emulation of the behaviour of that character. Good books also develop the ability to distinguish between basic perceptions such as good and bad, right and wrong. They have the formative power that can make real difference in one’s life.
